

BROOKLYN EXPONENT

In September of 1881, the first edition of the Brooklyn Exponent rolled off the press. Since that time, the paper has been published without fail every week.

The stories we tell are your stories, stories of your business and of your government, of entertainment and news, as well as stories of new life and of those passing on.

We believe we have succeeded for over 129 years because our pages reflect your lives in a way that is not only accurate, but fun and entertaining as well.

Of course, times are changing.

Today, people are communicating in more ways than ever before. The ability to send text, sound, pictures and video electronically is presenting fundamental differences in the way our world communicates.

For those of us in the communications industry, these are exciting times, and The Brooklyn Exponent is embracing the changes to our business – and our community – with enthusiasm.

In fact, we are now offering a complete line of web design, website hosting and logo design for our customers.

We are also unveiling a new community website, www.exponentextra.com, which will provide the residents with a creative way to express their individuality. Visitors can post video, pictures and opinions on the free site for others to enjoy.

And, our talented team of graphic artists is putting together some of the most beautiful work in our history, as the product you are holding in your hand highlights.

People are often surprised to learn that we print not only our own publication, but dozens of others as well, from periodicals based in Lansing to Ecorse to Jackson and points between, and we can meet most of their printing and mailing needs.

Curiouser and curiouser

Judging from the past, the future has never looked more exciting, but some things never change.

People still love a good story, and we intend to continue telling yours – in new ways and in old – as long as you will let us.
